

An inverted microscope comprises an image output port that forms an image of an observation sample to the external surface facing to an observer, at the front side of a microscope main body, below an observation tube to which eyepieces are attached, and photographing devices configured that one of at least two kinds of photographing devices is selectively attachable/detachable to the image output port.